This book revolves around WWII's D-day deception schemes. It has a wide cast of characters, but the primary ones are Catherine Praider, a half French/half English woman who goes into occupied France for SOE (British wartime espionage and sabotage agency), and T. F. O'Neill, an American major serving in London with the office in charge of hoodwinking the Nazis.

Fall from Grace by Larry Collins - Goodreads
Collins's first solo novel since 1980's The Fifth Horseman (written with Dominique Lapiere, who teamed with him on the pop history is Paris Burning?) is his best book yet, a firmly placed World War II melodrama about a tremendous real-life hoax that the British Intelligence worked on the Gestapo and the Abwehr--a hoax intended to divert German troops from resisting the Normandy invasion until the Allies had an unbudgeable foothold.
